

Poem: Diphthongs ow & ou

On a quiet winter night,
when a full moon lights up the sky,
do you hear an owl's cry?

A haunting hooting sound,
"Too-whit-too-woo, too-whit-too-woo."
Who can the owl be calling?

The owl turns its head from side to side
cause its eyes are open wide.
And it might rotate its head around
to locate its prey along the ground.

And when the owl does take flight,
its wings flap silently in the night
cause its feathers muffle the sounds.
Owls are made for nighttime rounds.
